Best insight from top research papers

Young people aged 20 generally exhibit higher levels of media literacy compared to older individuals. Research indicates that adolescents and young adults have been the focus of numerous studies assessing media literacy competencies, highlighting sustained investments in this age group by various organizations ^[1]. Additionally, a study comparing different age groups found that as individuals move from younger to older age groups, there is an increase in critical-controlling media consumption styles, reflecting a higher level of media literacy in older individuals ^[2]. Furthermore, the younger among the elderly (65 years and older) tend to have a higher level of digital literacy than the older elderly, suggesting a generational difference in media literacy levels ^[3].
